

“Inside Perspective with Cindy Castano”

Sunday, December 16, 2007

A SILK STOCKING FILLED WITH MUD - Napoleon Bonaparte

Special Guest: Joe Madison

Escorted by radio talk show host Joe Madison (R), actress Mia Farrow (L) delivers media clips of a torch relay campaign, which started in August 2007, to protest against the genocide in Darfur, to the Chinese Embassy 10 December 2007 in Washington, DC. Activists staged a torch relay protest calling on the Chinese government to use its influence on Sudan to stop the genocide in Darfur.

- The 2008 Summer Olympics will be hosted in Beijing. After decades of attempting approval by the Int'l Olympic Committee, it is a long-awaited glory and will be China's debut onto the world stage.
- Protests have already begun from those opposing the Olympics, labeling them "The Genocidal Olympics" for China's failure to take action as a party to the UN Security Council and through economic relationships in Sudan to stop the Darfur Genocide.
- China's special envoy on Darfur, Liu Guijin defended Beijing's record in Sudan and said "the country would continue to refrain from applying political pressure on the Khartoum regime. Political pressure is not conducive towards resolving conflicts, that the route of Darfur crisis lies with the fight for ecological survival and not with any racial conflicts. This view may not be universally accepted yet, but more and more politicians are coming to realize that the better way to help Sudan is not through sanctions but through economic aid that would eradicate poverty."
- The statement came as China showcased to foreign media its 315-member engineering unit that has been sent to Darfur as an avant-garde to a combined United Nations and African Union peacekeeping force approved by the Security Council in July. Chinese soldiers will be responsible for building bridges and roads and exploring water sources in Darfur. The unit's dispatch represents China's willingness to quickly restore peace and start reconstruction work.

Join me in a lively discussion with Joe Madison as we uncover the politics, the economics and the "morality" of China's hosting of the 2008 Olympics in light of its failure to stop genocide in Sudan.

Joe Madison www.joemadison.com

- aka “The Black Eagle”
- Multi-Award Winning XM Satellite Radio talk show “activist”
- Slavery Abolitionist and Founder of The Sudan Campaign

He is one of the most sought after speakers and media guest in the nation. He has captivated audiences from Capitol Hill to Hollywood Hills. He has been featured on news and talk shows across the country regarding current affairs, political events, civil and human rights. He keeps audiences of every generation spellbound with his insight, witty style and ability to speak about the most controversial issues. He motivates audiences to change the world and themselves. His lifetime of experiences as a human and civil rights activist and talk show personality places him among that rare breed of speakers that not only talks the talk, but walks the walk.